James S. Kepley, Executive Director of the National Aquarium in Baltimore, and his daughters Marie and Mandy are looking forward to the opening of the new aquarium in July. And who isn't? Here they give a Baltimore tourist a sneak preview of the children's coral reef.

John Klink, technician, and son Patrick know that The Walters Art Gallery is one of America's great public museums, with exhibitions from the Ancient Near East, early Greece, Rome and the distant Orient to 18th and 19th century European and American paintings and sculpture. The once-private collection was bequeathed to the city of Baltimore in 1931. And aren't we proud!

Baltimoreans will soon be riding in sleek, modern rapid-transit vehicles when the 8-mile line currently under construction is completed. It's a fascinating job to Kenneth J. Skidmore, subway construction worker for Intercounty Construction Corporation, and his son Mark. The line will run from Reisterstown Plaza to Charles Center and about 4 1/2 miles will be underground. Talk about Baltimore on the move!
